

Woman Architect Plans Home Around Owner's Interests

By BETTY WELLS
I've several bones to pick with architects and builders. Because so often you'd think from the way out of the houses they'd plan, that they didn't really care much about how a woman would want a house.

Women architects have good ideas about houses.

for the sofa or the buffet in rooms that are all cut up with too many openings. Then, too, I'm death on having several different sizes of windows in one room. Especially a 13 or 14 almost-impossible-to-drape windows that so often go above built-in bookcases on either side of the fireplace. And give me big closets and a good traffic route through the house.

Speaking of Sports—6-Man Football Clicking Fast In Rural Areas

PROBABLY few of the hundreds of thousands who watch the big intercollegiate football games these fall Saturday afternoons have ever heard of "six-man football."

Reports from state intercollegiate athletic associations indicate that the number will be doubled in 1933. Born only four years ago, the game has already outgrown its swaddling clothes.

When Lincoln Spoke at Gettysburg "Three Score and 15 Years Ago"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
Western Newspaper Union

THREE score and fifteen years ago a tall, gaunt, sad-eyed man stood upon a platform overlooking the scene of one of the world's decisive battles and began to speak. His voice was thin, shrill, high-pitched in striking contrast to the rich, full tones of the trained orator who had preceded him.

At first that previous speaker had held his audience spellbound with his eloquence. But as his speech went on and on and on for an hour and 37 minutes, in fact, people began to weary. So it was something of a relief when he finished and there was a certain revival of interest when the next speaker arose and drew himself to his full height.

"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in Lib-

How many and how few years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether these notes, or any notes so conceived so dedicated, can long endure. We are now on a great battlefield of this war. We have come to dedicate a portion of this field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. So that, altogether fitting and proper, we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate—we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow—the ground, the brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for the living that we are dedicated here to the unfinished work which they here finished, and to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that the government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

EDWARD EVERETT

If the Gettysburg Address helped make Lincoln immortal, it is one of the ironies of fate that it also helped thrust into obscurity Edward Everett, the man who had been cast in the role of "chief orator" at the dedication of the battlefield, so that he is now something of a "forgotten man" in history and memory mainly as "the other man who spoke at Gettysburg."

Everett was born in Dorchester, Mass., April 11, 1794, a member of one of the leading families of New England. After several years of study in Germany and England he returned to this country to occupy the chair of Greek literature at Harvard and to become editor of the North American Review. One of the earliest examples of the "scholar in politics," Everett became successively congressman, governor of Massachusetts, minister plenipotentiary to England and held a brief interim as president of Harvard, secretary of state in President Lincoln's cabinet.

But his chief claim to fame lies in his being a vigorous champion of American institutions when it was the fashion in Europe to sneer at our democracy, and an equally vigorous champion of honesty in public affairs and of social justice. He was a resolute opponent of white occupation of Indian lands, and of the use of the red man. To him also was due the preservation of a sound currency in the panic of 1857 and the establishment of the first board of education in the United States. No man could expect an accomplishment, this, and it should be added the fact that he was the fashion in Europe to sneer at our democracy, and an equally vigorous champion of honesty in public affairs and of social justice.

Tribute to Lafayette.

Everyone expected him to deliver the usual scholarly address for scholarly men. But one circumstance helped change that. In the audience was Marquis de Lafayette, now an old man, who had come back to America to receive the tribute of the people for whose liberties he had fought nearly half a century earlier.

Near the end of Everett's speech, he turned to the old soldier and launched into a tribute nearly half a century earlier. Near the end of Everett's speech, he turned to the old soldier and launched into a tribute nearly half a century earlier.

Helped Save Mt. Vernon.

In 1833 he saved his eloquence in a cause which helped spread his fame. He became interested in the effort to raise $200,000 to purchase Mount Vernon and preserve it as a national shrine. He prepared an address on the character of Washington and delivered it in various cities all over the country. People came from afar to hear him—not because there was anything new in what he had to tell them about the Father of His Country but because of the grace and style of the orator's presentation of his subject.

Tributes From England.

But if the greatness of the Gettysburg speech was not appreciated at the time it was uttered, recognition was not long in coming. Nor has that recognition been confined to his fellow-countrymen. It was Lord Chalmers of England who characterized the speech as "a classic which will endure as long as the English language is spoken. And another Englishman, Lord Carnarvon, in a lecture at the University of Cambridge paid it this tribute: "I declare that the task of deciding which is the masterpiece of modern English eloquence by awarding the prize to an American, the Gettysburg Address is far more than a pleasing piece of occasion. It is a pure piece of English composition, as well as of English oratory. Lincoln's words are among the riches and treasures of mankind."

erty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," the shrill voice proclaimed.

"People leaned forward to listen, for it was difficult for some to hear. A minute passed . . . two minutes . . . then . . . That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

With those words the speaker sat down. His audience looked at each other in amazement. Why, he had stopped just when they thought he was beginning! Who ever heard of a man making such a short speech!

They were right. For there were exactly 372 words in that speech. As he sat down there was but very little applause and that was apparently for the speaker, because he was the President of the United States, and not for the words he had uttered. But in that they were wrong. For the speech to which they had just listened was Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, that has been called "a classic which will endure so long as the English language is spoken."

A Disappointed Audience.

In the light of that statement with which few, if any, will dissent—it seems strange indeed that the people who heard it uttered 75 years ago were so little impressed by it. Yet such was the case. Dr. William B. Barton in his book, "Lincoln at Gettysburg" (a 254-page book about a 272-word speech) says: "People were disappointed. After Everett's oration, the President's speech seemed almost no speech at all. . . . That night they told of hearing Everett and of seeing the President. Incidentally some of them mentioned the President had uttered a few remarks; yes, they had heard the President. But while they were glad to have heard him, not many of them at the time said very much about the President's speech.

A few remarks indeed! Yet, the people who heard him were not the only ones who felt that way about it. Another of Lincoln's biographers, Ward H. Lamon, has recorded Lincoln's own dissatisfaction with his speech. "I tell you, that speech fell on the audience like a wet blanket. I am distressed about it. I ought to have prepared it with more care."

But he was wrong about that, just as he was wrong when, in the speech itself, he said "the world will little note nor long remember what we say here. Perhaps the world "little noted" at the time what he said there. But certainly it seems destined to "long remember."

However, Lincoln wasn't the "world's worst prophet" in this respect. That title must go to the editor of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot and Union who wrote an editorial in which he said: "The President succeeded on this occasion because he acted without sense and without constraint in a panorama that was gotten up more for the benefit of his party than for the glory of the nation and the honor of the dead. . . . We pass over the silly remarks of the President; for the credit of the nation we are willing that the veil of oblivion shall be dropped over them and that they shall no more be repeated or thought of."

Of course, that was the foundation of a bitterly partisan newspaper. But the Harrisburg editor wasn't alone in his attitude. For, as Barton records, "The Chicago Times and the Register in Lincoln's own home town of Springfield and other partisan newspapers were equally caustic and equally unjust."

Lincoln Overlooked.

One of the most interesting examples of failure of the editors to appreciate the speech was that of the New York Times. The

WHAT TO EAT and WHY

Are Your Children Eating Clean Food? Asks C. Houston Gouss—Points Out Hazards of Neglected Hand-Washing

By C. HOUSTON GOUSS

"I DO feed my Johnny correctly," a young mother said to me not long ago. "I give him milk and eggs and vegetables and fruits. And still he has colds! Would you mind telling me just how you reconcile that with all this talk about our newer knowledge of nutrition—and how it helps children to have better health?"

"I don't know," I answered. "But I wonder if it would be convenient for me to meet Johnny?" "Certainly," she replied. "He'll be home from school in a few moments. He usually stops at the school playground for an hour or two, to play dodge ball with the other boys."

A moment or two later Johnny appeared. And a more grimy little lad I had seldom seen, certainly not outside of my neighborhood school as we sometimes call it when my hand during the introduction.

Johnny's hands were dirty. His face was dirty. His knees and legs were streaked with mud. There was a lollipop in his mouth, though he quickly pulled it out when his mother made the introduction.

No sooner had we uncloaked hands than a tremendous insect all but engulfed Johnny. And in spite of his almost adult manner of meeting a stranger, he had learned to cover his nose and mouth during a sneeze. The lollipop, though I noted that some of its visible soil, and doubtless some unseen germs, were transferred to my hand during the greeting.

No sooner had we uncloaked hands than a tremendous insect all but engulfed Johnny. And in spite of his almost adult manner of meeting a stranger, he had learned to cover his nose and mouth during a sneeze. The lollipop, though I noted that some of its visible soil, and doubtless some unseen germs, were transferred to my hand during the greeting.

And yet his mother could not understand why he had colds!

Contaminated Food

I have pointed out many times that in my opinion a mother's foremost duty should be to feed her child on the best and purest discoveries of nutritional science. Only by so doing can she hope to give them a sturdy body with straight bones, strong responsive muscles, a good circulation and sound healthy nerves.

But the parent who permits her offspring to eat with unwashed hands and thus take countless germs into his body with every mouthful of food is not giving the kind of body and brain every mother desires for her child. On the contrary, she is risking the danger of grave illness. For the micro-organisms which cause 92 out of every 100 deaths from communicable diseases enter or leave the body through the mouth or nose.

Health Linked to Cleanliness

All of us have heard the expression "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," though to observe fingers out of their mouths, likewise pencils and other objects. Teach them to wash the hands and feet frequently.

If they are to carry out this last instruction, it is imperative that soap and towels be available in school washrooms, as well as at home. Investigate conditions at the school your child attends. If facilities are not adequate, do something about it. Either arouse other mothers to help rectify the omissions, or failing that—have your child carry soap and paper towels from home!

By teaching cleanliness to your children, by making it a regular part of their training, you will help to safeguard their health and the health of every other child with whom they come in contact in their daily lives.

"Set" and "Sit"
The verbs "set" and "sit," like the verbs "lie" and "lay," often are confounded in their use. "Set" is transitive; to "sit" is intransitive. "I set the hen," but "she sits on her eggs." Incorrectly one speaks of a "setting hen" instead of a "sitting hen." Examples are: "My dress sits well"; "It will sit up," that is, will not go to bed; "Congress sits." "We set down figures," but "we sit down on the ground." An apparent contradiction is found in the sentence, "The sun sets," but the verb "sets" in this sentence has a different origin from the verb "set" under discussion. Long ago it was the custom to say, "The sun settles," but "settles" has been shortened to "sets."
